This is the third year in row IDG has held the competition "2012 Global Competitiveness Brands -Top 10 from China," with which the prize-winning companies interpret the power of Chinese brands to the world. On the previous two sessions of the event, nearly 100 internationally famed business leaders and scholars from China and the US shared opinions with the audience, greatly influencing China, the US and the rest of the world.

The Executive Leadership Training was held at the same time. The course focused on the theme "Development of innovative leadership" and helped Chinese business executives enhance capabilities in key areas needed by a global leader, such as economic policy and industry trend, global financial context, and management and technological innovation. The program systematically fortified business leaders' global vision and knowledge in global competition from aspects of new concept, new know-how, new information and new technology.

The winners of "2012 Global Competitiveness Brands -Top 10 from China" believe that structural adjustment and industrial re-structuring must be enforced as the industrial environment has been undergoing profound changes all over the world. As a result, business internal transformation, upgrading and model adjustment are also urgent tasks to be accomplished. This activity enables us to network with experts from the US and learn from their knowledge, and thus help with our thinking over critical issues such as enterprise management and sustainability. By leveraging the intelligence and vision of world-leading scholars and organizations and by combining the real needs of the Chinese market, we are confident to find the right road to transformation on the back of branding power, raise the global competitiveness of our brands, and catch opportunities on the international market.
